Webcam images from I-95. (<https://www.livejournal.com/away?to=http%3A//www.traffic.md.gov/video/videolow.asp%3Ffeed%3D16>)

Here's a photo from Maryland that looks very much like my back garden right now.

You do have a history of well-timed birthday catastrophes. Wanna bet we're on an airplane next Saturday?

I would rather be snowed in with a Maenad. :-P

I hope you can stay snug inside until the weather improves and the roads are good again.

Maybe the whole world will curl up under the snow and stop being horrible to each other and I can sleep late.

From your mouth the [$deity]'s ears!

[Edit:] 'Cause "From your moth..." makes nearly no sense at all. ;>.>

I watched for about a minute. ONE CAR. I'm glad people are being smart and staying home.

It's just nuts.

I'd be glad to take some of it off your hands. So would my students! We're all quite miffed that all our many feet of snow have happened in Christmas break, or on weekends. This lack of snow days is Not Fair.

O.O

Wow..., just wow.

Nothing like that ever happens down this part of the world...

And here I am in Cleveland, where such things are kind of expected, and we have maybe four inches. The wind is kind of fierce though - after an hour of forms, I came in and a hard backed unpadded wood chair felt really warm against my butt.

That is SRS snow you have going on there.

Woof. That's a snowstorm.

Alas, here in Massachusetts, most of the ground is bereft of any snow cover at all.

I watched the I95-between the beltways tour for a while. Traffic in the I-95 North of I-195 was at a standstill.

Went off and had something to eat.

Checked out the traffic-cams again.

The standstill at I-95 north of I-195 finally started breaking up around 5:30pm with the arrival of a vehicle with blinky lights. Traffic began leaving via that exit.

Makes me very very glad I am here in my nice warm house, here in PA where traffic is moving along just fine. WFMZ traffic cam
